

Abstract

Polynucleotides that encode proteins associated with oil content in plants are useful in constructs to make transgenic plants, e.g., maize or soybean, with desirable oil content phenotype
5 and progeny of any generation derived from the fertile transgenic plants. Markers associated with oil content QTL are useful in breeding for plants with desired oil content.